

DUCK HATCHING IN THESE ISLANDS

The Chinese are quite unexcelled in Hawaii in the industry of hatching duck eggs by the incubator system. There is an extensive duck incubator plant on Pauahi street operated by a Chinese firm, which is a very interesting place to visit.

Chinese having duck farms sell their eggs for one dollar for forty to the incubator owners and later, when a hatching has been effected, buy the young goslings for six dollars a hundred. The eggs are first subjected to 24 hours in the incubator at a heat of 102 degrees, after which the charcoal fire is removed and they remain three days longer subjected to the retained heat of the incubator and that generated in their own course of development, which increases every hour. They are then given seventeen days wrapped in Manila paper in barrels packed with rice paddy, and are turned over twice daily. Thereafter seven days on a shelf completes the task. It requires 28 days to hatch out a duck egg by the incubator system. As many as 4500 eggs are "set" at one time and it is a wonderful sight to be on hand on the 28th day when the fuzzy little birds begin to peck their way out of the shells.—Yamato Shimbun.

SUCCESSFUL SALE.

Blom's great clearance sale commenced yesterday and the opening day was an immense success. Prices have been slashed all along the line and rare bargains are of pleasurable frequency. The sale will last two weeks. Fresh novelties will be brought forward every day and the sale will provide for patrons an interminable series of pleasant and profitable surprises.

The tamale possesses valuable digestive qualities which would have made a fortune for it had it been born a patent medicine.

It's just as well it wasn't, however, for "a tablespoon of tamale in a little water every three hours" wouldn't have sounded exactly right.

The good, old, solid chicken tamale may be obtained at the CRITERION every evening after 5.

Pilsner, Wurzbürger and Kulmbacher beer, by the same tokens.
